

Positive Energy

a festival of colors that inspired the imagination and invigorates the senses

Miscellaneous and colorful news from my studio | Flensburg, February 2024

Hello dear Max Mustermann,

Positive energy is very important to me; I really like to feel and enjoy it. For me it is an important prerequisite when painting and I am very happy when my pictures succeed in passing on the positive energy to their viewers. This applies to all of my paintings - and especially to the variations of an abstract painting motif that is literally called "Positive Energy" and has accompanied me for at least ten years. This fourth news letter is about this series of paintings.

Positive Energy XXL 16

For this picture I mixed red, orange, magenta, pink, blue, green, lavender, violet, beige, brown, yellow and white shades on my palette. The center of the painting is a detailed, multi-colored stream of colors that includes swirling yellow and white tones. The central, bright element appears to rise against a predominantly orange background.

Triptych: Positive Energy XXXL 1

The color tones seem to dance, giving the composition a sense of momentum, joy and liveliness. In the large variety of details there are always new aspects for the viewer's eye. Anyone who gets involved in this monumental work can discover and enjoy so much positive energy... This three-part painting arouses interest and has an invigorating effect. It enriches the room and creates an atmosphere that is as personal as it is beautiful.

Positive Energy-Variations

For this motif I use a wide variety of colors, the yellow tones are usually the largest group. The motif contains balance and harmony as well as liveliness and diversity, so it reflects one of my guiding principles:
"I want to paint symphonies of color...always lively, always full of energy and always positive."

The variations of Positive Energy have been with me for at least 19 years.

The big variety of "Positive Energy"

For this motif I usually use a lot of color tones, with the yellow tones being the ones that have the most impact on the image. The composition of the picture is characterized by a central, seemingly rising bright element that is surrounded by a colorful stream of colors. The color stream is rich in contrast and detail; the brush strokes and spatula movements are short. The background is structured with softer color transitions and longer brush strokes, it often picks up a few tones from the center, but is more pastel in nature. The motif combines balance and harmony as well as liveliness and diversity, so it reflects one of my guiding principles: "I want to paint symphonies of color...always lively, always full of energy and always positive."

No principle without exceptions: for Positive Nature Energy XXL 1 I only selected a few shades, some variations have a spherical, bright center, others have more resolved shapes. As the name shows, I chose intense red instead of yellow as the main color for the two Positive Red Energy pictures. The paintings are often almost symmetrical in terms of color and shape, with Positive Energy XXL 1, 4 and 6 being symmetrical either only in shape or in color or not at all. The backgrounds are predominantly light, sometimes almost white, while the black background gave Positive Energy Black its name.

There are now "Positive Energy" paintings in all formats, from small S-pictures (100 x 70 cm) to XL paintings (155 x 105 cm, of which there are most of the pictures) to XXL pictures (240 x 150 cm); "Positive Energy" also exists in a narrative panoramic format, in an exciting portrait format and even as a huge triptych measuring 450 x 240 cm (a three-part painting, each measuring 240 x 150 cm).

So actually I have painted really many variations of "Positive Energy" and I really enjoy painting them. Apparently the motif is also very popular with many fans and lovers; over 30 "Positive Energy" paintings have already found their walls and are spread across several continents worldwide.

A "Positive Energy" - painting for a good cause: countdown until 11th of March 2024

"With the proceeds from online auctions and donations, 100 percent of which are passed on, United Charity supports children's aid projects throughout Germany, but also internationally."

I would like to make a contribution with an abstract picture "Positive Energy", which is being auctioned until 11th of March to give victims of violence, poverty, disasters, incurable illness and war at least a little break in the form of a free vacation. Many celebrities such as Barack Obama, Angela Merkel, Günther Jauch, Kevin Costner, Karl Lagerfeld and Dirk Nowitzki are or were also active in helping. There are a wide range of opportunities to help through the ongoing auction.

I'll take a look at United Charity...

Stay positive
and until - at the latest - the next newsletter, greetings from the studio
